Hańba! is furious punk-folk singing, banjo, accordion, clarinet, saxophone and a big drum. The band members describe themselves as the “Rebellious Backyard Orchestra”. The protagonists of their songs stigmatise the evils of the world of the 1930s and 1940s - times far away, yet in many ways close and similar to our own: hatred, social inequality, chauvinism, and anti-Semitism invariably thrive, and the shadow of war is heavier than we have ever imagined.

In spinning a catastrophic vision, Hańba! is supported by poets (well-known: Tuwim, Broniewski, Ginczanka, and less known: Szenwald, Szymanski, and Wittlin). Establishing contact with the audience is facilitated by informal and affordable instruments.

This time the ensemble adds a fantasy element to their tale: the victorious Republic of Poland becomes the hegemon of Central Europe. The post-war reality, however, is quite different from what the propaganda promised. There are poverty, crisis, and shortages. Do you know it? Of course not. So listen up. It will hurt.
